1. The airfield is located on the northwestern edge of Leningrad, Leningrad Oblast, west or southwest of the extended Karl Marx project, north of the Novaya Derebnya settlement. The field was bordered on the south by the railroad line to Finland and on the northeast and north by a woods. There were no concrete runways. Some hangars were on the northeastern edge of the field, in front of the woods.
2. There was little flying activity. About two or three twin-engine Douglas planes landed at and took off from the field daily. Local flights were made in the summer by two or three biplanes and 2 or 3 Aerocobra fighters with single engines, noticeably long nose compartment, nose wheel and landing gear retracting inward.
